

Using True Colors to Understand Co-Workers

Copyright © Bruce Maxwell, 2005

1. A staff member who is never late and comes to work even when they are sick is probably a _____
2. Someone who frequently complains that we don't get enough done around here is probably _____
3. Someone who complains that there are too many rules around here is probably _____
4. Someone who is always suggesting that we call a meeting and get everyone together to discuss an issue is probably _____
5. Someone who complains that they had to do it that way last time is probably _____
6. Someone who suggests that there is a different way to do it better is _____
7. A staff member who seems to spend all of her time talking to others is probably _____
8. Individuals who thrive in a competitive environment are probably _____
9. The two Colors who get the most upset when they feel betrayed are _____ and _____
10. Co-workers who are always voicing praise of others even if they don't deserve it are probably _____
11. Individuals who are generally optimistic are probably _____
12. Someone who always asks for you to put it in writing is probably _____
13. Individuals who always suggest that they should be put in charge tend to be _____
14. A staff member who comes into your office with new "ideas" that they suggest you try is probably a _____
15. A staff member in your department who keeps to herself and rarely engages in conversation with others is probably _____
16. A staff member from another department comes to request assistance, uses a pen from the top of your desk without even asking and forgets to return it is probably _____ or _____.
17. Someone who tends to make decisions on the spur of the moment is probably _____
In what ways can that create a problem?
18. Someone who needs to think through a problem thoroughly is probably _____ Why?
19. Someone who is concerned about how a decision will affect others is probably _____
In what ways can that create a problem?
20. Someone who uses written guidelines or "how it's been done in the past" to make decisions is probably _____ Why?